

Receivership

Who is a creditor?

You are a creditor if the company owes you money. You may be owed money because you:

- supplied goods or services to the company
- made loans to the company
- paid for goods or services that you have not received
- are an employee owed money for unpaid wages and other entitlements.

A contingent creditor is owed money by the company if a certain event occurs (e.g.

if they succeed in a legal claim against the company).

Creditors might be secured or unsecured:

- A secured creditor holds a security interest, such as a mortgage, in some or all the company's assets, to secure a debt owed by the company.
- An unsecured creditor does not hold a security interest in the company's assets.

Employees are a special category of unsecured creditor. In a receivership, in certain circumstances, some outstanding employee entitlements are paid before the debt of the secured creditor is repaid.

The purpose of receivership

The secured creditor – via the receiver – takes control and usually protects, collects and sells some or all the company's assets.

This is done for the company to repay debts owed to the secured creditor. A court-appointed receiver may also take control of and sell company property if the court order provides that power.

The secured creditor can appoint a receiver because they hold a security interest that allows them to appoint a receiver. The security interest may comprise:

- a non-circulating security interest (e.g. a security interest in land, plant and equipment)
- a circulating security interest in assets that are used and disposed of in the course of normal trading operations (e.g. a security interest in debtors, cash and stock).

The powers of the receiver are set out in the security agreement and the Corporations Act 2001.

Sometimes the terms of appointment give the receiver the power to manage the company's affairs. In these cases, a receiver is known as a receiver and manager.

It is possible for a company in receivership to also be in provisional liquidation, liquidation, voluntary administration or subject to a deed of company arrangement.

The receiver's role

Generally, the receiver's role is to:

- collect and sell enough of the secured assets to repay the debt owed to the secured creditor (this may include selling assets or the company's business)
- pay out the money collected in the order required by law
- report to Australian Securities & Investments Commission (ASIC) any possible offences or other irregular matters they come across.

The receiver's principal duty is to the secured creditor. The main duty owed to unsecured creditors is an obligation to take reasonable care to sell secured assets for not less than market value or, if there is no market value, the best price reasonably obtainable. A receiver also has the same general duties as a company director.

The receiver has no obligation to report to unsecured creditors about the receivership, either by calling a meeting or in writing. However, the receiver will usually write to the company's suppliers to inform them of their appointment. Unsecured creditors are not entitled to see the receiver's reports to the secured creditor.

Distribution of money

A receiver will usually obtain money from the assets they are appointed over by selling them. To sell a company's business, the receiver may continue to trade the business until they sell it as a going concern.

Once the receiver sells the assets, the money collected is distributed as follows:

- money from the sale of non-circulating assets is paid to the secured creditor after the costs and fees of the receiver in collecting this money have been paid
- money from the sale of circulating assets is paid out in the following order:
 - o the receiver's costs and fees in collecting this money
 - o certain priority claims, including employee entitlements (if the liability for these has not been transferred to a new owner)
 - o repayment of the secured creditor's debt.

In both cases, any funds left over are paid to the company or its external administrator, if one has been appointed.

If the receiver is appointed under a security interest comprising both non-circulating and circulating security interests (which is common), there will be costs and fees of the receivership that cannot be directly allocated to money from selling the non-circulating assets or circulating assets. These costs are allocated in proportion to the amount obtained from selling the non-circulating assets and circulating assets.

If employee entitlements are paid by the receiver under a circulating security interest, the payments are made in the following order:

- outstanding wages and superannuation
- outstanding leave of absence (e.g. annual leave and long service leave)
- retrenchment pay.

Each category (or class) must be paid in full before the next category is paid. If there are insufficient funds to pay a category in full, the available funds are paid on a pro rata basis (and the next category or categories will be paid nothing).

The receiver has no obligation to pay any other unsecured creditors for outstanding pre-appointment debts.

Purchases of goods and services by receiver

If the receiver incurs debts for the purchase of goods and services during the receivership under the receiver's authority, these are paid from asset sales as costs of the receivership. The receiver is personally liable to pay for these costs if there are insufficient funds available from asset sales.

To have the benefit of this protection, you should ensure you receive a purchase order authorised in the manner advised by the receiver.

If the receiver continues to use, occupy or hold property owned by another party that is in the company's possession or occupied by the company, they are personally liable for any rent or amounts payable arising after seven days from the beginning of the receivership. The receiver can avoid this liability by informing the other party within seven days from their appointment that they do not intend to use the property.

Pre-existing contracts

The appointment of a receiver does not automatically terminate pre-receivership contracts with the company. The contract may remain current without the receiver having personal liability for the company's obligations under the contract. If you have such a contract, you may wish to seek legal advice because the law in this area is complex.

Receiver's fees

The receiver is entitled to be paid their fees from the sale of secured assets. How the fees are calculated is usually set out in the security agreement and appointment document. Unsecured creditors have no role in setting or approving the receiver's fees.

ASIC, a liquidator, voluntary administrator or deed administrator of the company may apply to the court for the receiver's remuneration to be reviewed.

Other implications for unsecured creditors
Legal action may be commenced or continued against the company despite the appointment of a receiver. This means an unsecured creditor can apply to the court to have the company put into liquidation if there is an unpaid debt. You may wish to do this – particularly if the company owes you a large amount – if there are:

- expectations there will be money or property left over after realisation of the security asset and payments to/by the receiver
- possible recoveries that may be available to a liquidator for the benefit of unsecured creditors, which are not available to a receiver
- potential offences committed by those associated with the company that a liquidator can investigate
- reasons for the liquidator to review the validity of the appointment of the receiver and the security interest, and to monitor the progress of the receivership.

Surplus property

If there are any assets or money left over when the receivership is complete, they will be returned to the company (and the control of the company's directors) unless a liquidator or another external administrator is appointed.

If a liquidator is appointed, they must carry out the liquidation for the benefit of all unsecured creditors.

Directors and receivership

Receivership does not affect the legal existence of the company. The directors continue to hold office, but their powers depend on the powers of the receiver and the extent of the assets over which the receiver is appointed.

Control of the secured assets, which often includes the company's business, is taken away from the directors.

Directors must provide the receiver with a Report on Company Activities and Property and allow the receiver access to books and records about the secured assets.

Conclusion of receivership

A receivership usually ends when the receiver has:

- collected and sold all or enough secured assets to repay the secured creditor
- completed all their receivership duties
- paid their receivership liabilities.

Generally, the receiver resigns or is discharged by the secured creditor. Unless another external administrator has been appointed, full control of the company and any remaining assets goes back to the directors.

*Disclaimer

Before acting on any information you've may received during a strategic financial consultation, or read about on our websites, email communications, guides including our newsletters, you should consider the appropriateness of the advice, having regard to your own objectives, financial situation and needs.

If any products are discussed, you should obtain a Product Disclosure Statement relating to the products and consider its contents before making any decisions. It is recommended to seek advice from a qualified professional relevant to your particular needs or interests. (For instance, Tax Advice from a Tax Agent, Financial Advice from a Licensed Financial Adviser and so on and so forth). Information has been sourced from Australian Securities & Investments Commission and Australian Restructuring Insolvency and Turnaround Association.

CN-RRI | National Office Locations

Melbourne

Suite 203, 517 Flinders Lane Melbourne, VIC 3000

Brisbane

Level 19, 10 Eagle Street, Brisbane, QLD 4000

Sydney

Level 26, 44 Market Street, Sydney, NSW 2000

P: 1300 904 946

E: enquiries@cnrri.com.au

